A SINGULAR STORY .- The Paris Constitutionnal of a late date, says that the following statement has been confirmed by letters both from Constantinople and Schumla. An European physician who arrived some months back at Constantinople, obtained by dint of solicitation the direction of the military hospital at Schumla. It appears that Omer Pacha soon perceived that this person kept up mysterious relations with Russian spies, and in consequence he kept on his guard. Soon after, being warned that there was an intention to poison him, he feigned to be indisposed, and sent for the medical man in question to attend him. This person, after examining the patient, went out to prepare a calming potion, which, on his return, he presented to Omer Paoha to drink. The generalin chief of the Turkish army requested the physician to taste it first himself, and, as the other refused to do so, he forced him to arink the whole of it in his presence. Seeing that the physician then wanted to hurry out, he forced him to remain in the tent, in order that he might judge of the effect of the potion.
